Excerpt: . . . 11 Most scientists, according to leading scientific journals, now regard research cloning as impractical for treating patients. In the December 2001 issue of Nature, Peter Aldous (chief editor of news and features of Nature) said, The idea of thera-peutic cloning seems to be on the wane. . . most scientists now believe this will be too expensive and cumbersome for regular clinical use. In Stem Cells, (the first to isolate human embryo stem cells in 1998), Jamie Thomson of Johns Hopkins University writes, T he poor availability of human oo-cytes, the low efficiency of the nuclear transfer procedure, and the long population-doubling time of human ES cells make it difficult to envision this therapeutic cloning becoming a routine clinical procedure. And a recent New Scientist editorial states, that Ministers in Britain have too easily swallowed the line that cloning human...
