Accept this boon, tis all my present store; To-morrow will produce as many more. Mean while these heart-consuming pains remove, And give me gentle pity for my love. Oh was I made by some transforming power A bee to buzz in your sequesterd bower! To pierce your ivy shade with murmuring sound, And the light leaves that compass you around. I know thee, love, and to my sorrow sind, A god thou art, but of the favage kind; A lioness sure suckled the sell child, And with his brothers nurst him in the wild; On me his scorching flames incessant prey, Glow in my bones, and melt my soul away. Ah, nymph, whose eyes destructive glances dart, Fair is your face, but flints is your heart: With kisses kind this rage of love appease; For me, fond Swain! evn empty kisses please. Your scorn distracts me, and will make me tear The flowry crown I wove for you to wear, Where roses mingle with the ivy-wreath, And fragrant herbs ambrosial odours breathe. Ah me! what pangs I seel, and yet the fair Nor sees my sorrows, nor will hear my prayer. Ill doss my garments, since I needs must die, 4 And from yon rock, that points its summit high, Where patient Alfis snares the sinny fry, . Ill leap, and though perchance I rise again, Youll laugh to see me plunging in the main. By a prophetic poppy-leaf Lfound Your changd asseccion, for it...
