The old father Augustine complained of the multitude of idle ceremonies by which, even at that time, he saw the minds and consciences of men oppressed. These men, as if God regarded nought beside, have so increased the number of ceremonies beyond measure, that scarcely any thing else is left in their churches and devotions. The old father Augustine denies that it is according to the law of God for a monk to spend his days in sloth and ease, and, under the pretext of sanctity, to live upon the means of others; and the old father Apollonius says of such an one, that he is akin to a thief. These men have, shall I say herds or flocks of monks, who, although they do nothing, and do not so much as pretend to, or profess any appearance of sanctity, yet not only live, but live in all kind of excess, by other men s labours. An old council held at Rome, decreed that no man should be present at the saying of mass by a priest who was known to live in concubinage: These men allow their priests concubines for hire, and compel men to be present at their impieties. The old canons of the Apostles command the deposition of that bishop who should at the same time hold an office in the church and in the state: These men execute both, and are resolved to...
